

An aerial photograph of a tropical coastline. In the foreground, there are steep, green mountains with some rocky outcrops. A small, crescent-shaped bay with clear, turquoise water is nestled between the mountains. The water transitions from a light blue near the shore to a deeper blue further out. The sky is a clear, pale blue with a few wispy clouds. The overall scene is lush and scenic, typical of a Hawaiian island.

Imagining a Sequel to The Descendants: Can George Clooney Keep the Country Country?

Professor Roth will use clips from The Descendants movie to highlight legal and environmental issues from a dozen real stories in Hawai'i. After explaining applicable laws and describing how the real stories ended, Roth will invite the audience to formulate a compelling and legally believable ending to the reel story.
